ABSTRACT

This resource guide provides data on minorities enrolled in 500 colleges and universities. Descriptions of each institution are followed by total student enrollment and the percentage of students from four minority groups: Asian, Black, Hispanic, and Native American. The types of academic programs offered by the institution are illustrated by examples of their major programs. The booklet is intended to direct employing organizations to institutions with higher than average minority enrollments, to allow similar educational institutions to compare their minority enrollment figures, and to identify for minority students those educational institutions of special interest to them. Besides the information directory, this booklet provides the following: (1) definitions of minorities; (2) general data on minorities in higher education; (3) minority student enrollment/degrees by field of study; (4) notes on college enrollment by minority group; and (5) a list of useful books. # INTRODUCTION

Twenty years ago, we published our first book on affirmative action and this was followed over the years by a series of related works on minority organizations, special programs for minorities, and resources to aid equal employment programs.

To augment our existing materials dealing with minorities and to fill a void in the currently available resources, this new booklet has been prepared. It provides detail on minorities enrolled in 500 colleges and universities. For each institution, identifying data is provided followed by total student enrollment and the percentage of students from four minority groups. These are Asian, Black, Hispanic, and Native Americans. The types of academic programs offered by the institution are illustrated by citing some major programs.

This resource was developed to aid several groups:

-- Employing organizations may use the list to focus recruitment on institutions with higher than average minority enrollments.

-- Educational institutions may compare their percentage of minorities enrolled with colleges and universitites of similar size and mission.

-- Minority group students contemplating admission may learn about the current level of minority enrollment to identify colleges and universities of special interest to them.

The booklet is solely intended to direct persons to institutions where more definitive information may be obtained. While every attempt has been made to insure accuracy, errors may have occurred for which we apologize.

DEFINITIONS OF MINORITIES

In 1978, the federal government adopted a standard set of definitions to describe minority groups. These are cited below and are used as the basis for citing groups in this booklet.

Asian-- A "person having origins in any of the original peoples of Southeast Asia, the Indian subcontinent, or the Pacific Islands." This includes such countries as Korea, Japan, China, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, and the Philippines.

Black-- A "person having origins in any of the Black racial groups of Africa." This includes persons who may have come to the United States from one of the Caribbean countries.

Hispanic-- A "person of Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Central America or South American, or other Spanish culture or origin, regardless of race." Most Hispanics in this country come from Mexico or Puerto Rico--although there are thousands from other Spanish speaking countries.

Native Americans-- A "person having origins in any of the original peoples of North America and who maintains cultural identification through tribal affiliation or community recognition." This includes both American Indians and Alaska Natives. For some federal programs, only persons with at least one-fourth Native American blood are classified as such.

GENERAL DATA ON MINORITIES IN HIGHER EDUCATION

Thanks to a major national campaign in the 1960s, the number of minority college students has been increasing at a fairly regular pace for 25 years. Initially, most of the gains were for black students but in recent years their total has remained fairly constant while Asian American students increased almost 93 percent between 1976 and 1984 and Hispanic students went up around 38 percent in the same period, as shown in the data in Table I.

In contrast to white, nonHispanic students, minorities are much more likely to attend public than private colleges and universities. In a recent year, 79 percent of the black, 83 percent of Asian, and 77 percent of Native American students attended a public institution--in contrast to 77 percent of the white, nonHispanics.

Despite the increase in minority college students, they still are underrepresented in higher education. Table 2 contrasts their share of the total population and higher education enrollments.

Contributing to the fact that minorities are underrepresented in higher education today is their dropout rate prior to completing high school. Whereas 83 percent of Anglos (white, nonHispanics) graduate from high school, fewer than 55 percent of Chicanos (Hispanics) or Puerto Ricans ever get that far. Details on the percents who complete high school and go on for additional postsecondary training at various stages appear in Table 3.

MINORITY STUDENT ENROLLMENT/DEGREES BY FIELD OF STUDY

In recent years, around one million bachelor's degrees have been awarded by United States colleges and universities. Of these, approximately 6.5 percent are awarded to black, 2.4 percent to Hispanic, 2.1 percent to Asian, and 0.4 percent to Native American students--with the remaining 88.6 percent to white, nonHispanics and to foreign students.

At the master's level around 300,000 awards are made each year. Of these, 5.8 percent are awarded to black, 2.2 percent to Hispanic, 2.1 percent to Asian, and 0.3 percent to Native American students--totalling 10.4 percent of all awards.

Doctor's degrees are earned by around 33,000 persons each year with approximately 8.3 percent going to minorities including 3.8 percent to black, 1.4 percent to Hispanic, 2.7 percent to Asian, and 0.4 percent to Native Americans.

Each year, around 72,000 first professional degrees are awarded in such fields as law, medicine, dentistry, and theology/religion. Of these minorities receive 8.6 percent including 4.1 percent black, 2.2 percent Hispanic, 2.0 percent Asian, and 0.3 percent Native Americans.

Details on the number of degrees received by minorities in illustrative fields for a recent year appear in Table 4. In come cases, the table shows the number of minorities enrolled in various degree programs--the number for those enrolled obviously is far more than the number who will receive degrees in a year.

NOTES ON COLLEGE ENROLLMENTS BY MINORITY GROUP

Asian Americans are overrepresented in higher education-- that is, a higher proportion are college students today than their share of the total population. Their rapid growth was shown by the data in Table 1. A high percentage are foreign born, reflecting the influx of refugees from Southeast Asia at the end of the Vietnam Era. Enrollment data for the University of California at Berkeley class which entered in the fall of 1985 showed that 27 percent were Asian. In Berkeley's prestigious science and engineering fields, Asian account for far more than a quarter of the students.

Unlike other minorities, there are few distinctively "Asian institutions" instead, they account for a small but rapidly growing segment of higher education today.

Until the 1960s, the majority of all Black college students attended one of around 110 predominantly black colleges or universities. Most were located in southern states, as a part of a discriminatory education system which segregated black and other students from the first through the final years of education. These included such institutions as Johnson C. Smith University, Bethune-Cookman College, Fisk University, and Prairie View A & M University. Today, these traditionally black institutions still remain but enroll only a fraction of today's students. Some (such as Bluefield State College in West Virginia and Central State University in Oklahoma) no longer are largely black.

Some of the traditionally black colleges, particularly those in urban areas have experienced rapid growth in recent years. The 10 with the highest enrollments are as follows:

|---|---|
| University of the District of Columbia | 12,832 |
| Howard University | 11,800 |
| Southern University at Baton Rouge | 9,784 |
| Texas Southern University | 8,910 |
| Tennessee State University | 7,646 |
| Norfolk State University | 7,233 |
| Jackson State University | 6,088 |
| North Carolina A and T University | 5,426 |
| Florida A and M University | 5,269 |
| North Carolina Central University | 4,552 |

A high percentage of black and Hispanic students begin their college careers by attending a nearby two-year college and transfer later to a four-year institution.

Hispanic students are another rapidly growing segment of college today, particularly in states with high Mexican American populations (such as California, New Mexico, Arizona, and Texas) or Puerto Rican residents (such as New York and nearby eastern states).

Hispanics are the only group where a higher number are enrolled in two-year colleges than in four-year schools, with 56 percent attending two-year institutions.

Native American students are eligible for more financial aid from federal sources than any other minority group-- reflecting their special status and support from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Despite this aid, they are the most underrepresented minority in higher education today.

In the past, Indian students had to leave reservations and attend colleges in areas with which they were not familiar, far from family and friends. Today, a series of tribal-operated colleges has been established, located on or near Indian reservations. These are small, rural, and often far removed from population centers. They include such schools as Standing Rock Community College, Little Hoop Community College, and Sinte Gleska College.

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITITES WITH SIGNIFICANT ENROLLMENT OF MINORITY STUDENTS

This directory cites around 500 colleges and universities using information on their minority enrollments provided by the Office of Civil Rights of the US Department of Education. Data on enrollment and percent minority are for 1984-85.

Details on colleges and universities (official name, address, phone number, and highest level of offering) come from the Educational Directory: Colleges and Universities, 1985-86 published by the Center for Education Statistics, US Department of Education.

Details on some of the major programs offered by individual colleges come from the list of accreditations in the above directory as well as a review of majors with the most students obtained from studying a number of college guides.

Only institutions where one minority group accounted for 20 percent or more of total enrollment are included. In other words, if an institution had 10 percent black, 6 percent Hispanic, and 7 percent Asian American students, it would not be reported in this table. It only reports institutions where one minority accounted for 20 percent or more of the total enrollment. All minorities with over 20 percent are cited.

In a few cases, where current federal data was not available, institutions believed to have significant minority enrollments are included with the letters "n/a" (not available) cited in lieu of an actual percentage.

Major fields shown in the table are illustrative. They are not necessarily the majors at that institution with the most students. They do reflect the kinds of programs at the institution and some are selected because they may be of special interests to recruiting employers or prospective students.

The highest degree awarded by each institution is shown using Associate (two-year), Bachelor's (four year), Master's (five or six year), and Doctor's (seven or eight years beyond high school). Most institutions which offer the Master's or Doctor's degrees also offer the Bachelor's and that is assumed to be the case unless otherwise indicated.
